Shootings in Boston are up / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Boston homicides down but multiple shootings up

Gunplay. One shooting incident in 2015 had six victims.

Newly released Boston police crime numbers show that while gun-related homicides are down, more people are being shot during shooting incidents in the city.

There have been 19 gun-related homicides in 2015, compared with 28 for the same period in 2014. Shootings are up to 176 this year from 144 in 2014.

Non-fatal shootings have also increased, jumping to 157 in 2015 from 116 in 2014.

Another glaring statistic is the increase in the number of multiple people hit in a shooting incident. Instances of a single person shot in 2015 is down to 103 from 112 in 2014. But instances in which two or more people have been shot is up to 22 from 14 last year.

There were no reported instances in which three people were shot in 2014 — so far there have been five instances this year. There was one quadruple shooting in 2014, and there have been two this year.

Both 2014 and 2015 saw no instances in which five people were shot all at once, but this year there has been one instance of six people being shot.

As for the incidents involving multiple people shot, the police could only speculate.

"Unless we make an arrest and ask the shooter why it is that so many people are hit in a single incident, we can only guess," a BPD spokesman said. "It may be a case of multiple intended targets. It may also be a case of innocent bystanders getting caught in the line of fire."

There are two non-fatal shootings being investigated by the T police as well.

There have been 288 firearm-related arrests this year, and there were 309 in 2014. These numbers include default warrant arrests for past firearms charges and arrests for assault and battery with firearms where no guns were recovered as well as straight firearms arrest with gun recovery.

According to Universalhub.com, Boston police have never included data relating to multiple shootings in the periodic gun-related stats.

"The commissioner has acknowledged the uptick in gun violence," the BPD spokesman said. "But we are seeing a decrease in homicides from this year and last year."

So far, there have been 18 murders in Boston in 2015. There were 36 murders by this time last year.

Opiates. State, medical schools talk new prescription curriculum

Massachusetts doctors deciding whether to prescribe painkillers for their patients — and how much, at what dose — may soon have new guidance from state medical leaders.

Gov. Charlie Baker met with the deans of the state's four top medical schools Wednesday to talk plans to update curricula for medical students and create a set of statewide standards on prescribing painkillers, powerful drugs that can be a gateway to addiction.

"I view this as something that is multi-factorial, multi-disciplinary and there is no single silver bullet," Baker told reporters. "We're going to have some very important leaders in the health world working with us on this."

The effort comes as part of Baker's action plan on opiate abuse, one element of which seeks to bring new training to doctors, who are essentially the gatekeepers of the powerful medication.

"We know that most physicians have been prescribing in ways that are reasonable, but we also know that there have been some issues where too many opioids have been prescribed and allowed to get into our community," said Dennis Dimitri, president of the Massachusetts Medical Society.

Mike Duggan, who runs a resource called Wicked Sober, which connects addicts with treatment, said in an interview nearly every opiate addict he has worked with got their start the same way: abusing painkillers.

"They all started with prescriptions," Duggan, himself a recovering addict, told Metro. "Some took the medication legally, but others got it off the street, off the medicine cabinet or at a party."

Shots fired at police cruiser in Millis on Wednesday afternoon, state police report

A police cruiser in Millis erupted in flames after it was shot at on Wednesday afternoon, Massachusetts State Police said.

No injuries were reported.

Police were looking for a red pickup truck driven by a male thought to be between the ages of 25 and 40.

A state police spokesman told The Boston Globe that the pickup, possibly a Ford F-150, fled east toward Medford.

Local police told the paper that the officer who was shot at saw the suspect holding a black gun and that the officer returned fire.

Petition calls for better security for MBTA drivers

Safety. Attacks on drivers are down 9 percent this year.

A Moveon.org petition is almost at its goal to provide safeguards for MBTA bus drivers in order to protect them from unruly or violent passengers.

The petition comes after a passenger poured liquid on a driver on Aug. 26. The incident made headlines when Worldstarfights.com posted the video of a woman throwing a liquid on a driver who then gets off the bus. The driver is seen chasing the woman down and attacking her, even though she is holding a child. Onlookers rush over to break up the fight. The video has well over two million views.

"The public is very hard to deal with and drivers get no mercy at all," petition creator Anitra Nance wrote. "If no safeguards are going to be put in place, then a transit police officer should be assigned to each bus for the employee's safety when dealing with unruly and violent passengers."

MBTA spokesman Joe Pesaturo said that the T tested out a partition around the bus driver's seats, but the bus drivers' union opposed it.

"More than a year ago, the MBTA installed a partition around the bus driver's seat to allow drivers to test it," Pesaturo said. "After a testing period, the union, representing bus drivers, told the MBTA it did not want them."

Pesaturo said that T police officers patrol the buses regularly, and attacks on drivers are down 9 percent from last year.

A representative for the Boston Carmen's Union was not available for comment.

Bid fizzles for legal fireworks

Dud. The state AG's office today declined to certify a petition to put legal fireworks on the ballot in 2016; a petitioner could appeal the decision.

A bid to legalize fireworks in Massachusetts may be a dud.

Attorney General Maura Healey said Wednesday morning that she has declined to certify the ballot initiative that could have added a question on 2016 ballot regarding the legalization of fireworks. The petition was filed by Richard Bastien, a teacher and former state representative in Gardner.

The issue, Healey's office said, was in Bastien's request to not only legalize fireworks, but repeal regulation on explosives that aren't fireworks.

The language of the initiative would repeal a section of Massachusetts law that "restricts the manufacture, storage, sale or transfer of all explosive material" and keeps records of where explosives are stored secret, according to a letter released on Wednesday.

Healey's office decided the petition does not meet the state's requirements on "subjects that are not related or mutually dependent."

"Reasonable voters may wish to legalize the sale of consumer fireworks without also repealing safety provisions for other explosives," read the letter, signed by Juliana deHaan Rice, deputy chief of the office's government bureau.

Both the petition and the AG's decision are available online.

Bastien told Metro he hadn't ruled out challenging the attorney general's decision and said he also planned to work with legislators on the issue.

"If they don't pick up the ball and run with it, we will revisit this in 2018," Bastien said.

Next time, he said, he would be open to changing the petition so it doesn't also repeal explosives regulations.

Rulings from attorney generals do not represent opinions on policy matters, Healey's office said in a statement.

Her office certified 22 petitions today. In addition to the one on fireworks, nine were not certified. Of those, seven were deemed "inconsistent with certain constitutional rights" — six of them from one petitioner seeking changes to a political spending law — and one was an effort to prevent public officials from working with organizations that deny the Holocaust. One related to government accountability and one related to expanded gaming were each deemed "not in proper form."

All other high-profile ballot initiatives did earn certification, including four petitions from two competing groups pushing to legalize marijuana.

Obama enthused for LA Summer Olympics bid after Boston backs out

President Barack Obama was pleased with Los Angeles' bid to host the 2024 Summer Olympics, the White House said on Wednesday.

"Both the president and first lady are very enthusiastic and strongly supportive of the bid put forward by the city of Los Angeles," White House spokesman Josh Earnest said while traveling with the president in Alaska. Los Angeles was officially selected on Tuesday as the American candidate city that will bid to host the 2024 Summer Olympics after Boston pulled out of the race in July, the U.S. Olympic Committee said. Rocket lifts off to space station

A Russian Soyuz rocket carrying a three-man international crew, including Denmark's first astronaut, roared off on Wednesday from the Baikonur Cosmodrome in Kazakhstan, beginning a two-day journey to the International Space Station. The rocket carrying the Soyuz TMA-18M spaceship lifted off to the $100 billion orbiting laboratory, leaving just a puff of white smoke in the sky. The crew is commanded by veteran Russian cosmonaut Sergei Volkov, joined by rookie Andreas Mogensen from the European Space Agency and Aidyn Aimbetov, another first-time space flyer, from Kazakhstan's space agency Kazcosmos. ESA dubbed Mogensen "Denmark's Gagarin," a reference to the Soviet cosmonaut and first man in space, Yuri Gagarin. REUTERS

US Congress. President Obama secures key vote to protect Iran nuclear deal

President Barack Obama on Wednesday secured the 34th Senate vote needed to sustain a veto of any congressional resolution disapproving a nuclear deal with Iran, ensuring the accord will not fail in the U.S. Congress.

Democratic Senator Barbara Mikulski announced her support for the agreement, becoming the 32nd Senate Democrat, along with two independents, to back a pact announced on July 14, which exchanges sanctions relief for Iran for Tehran's agreeing to curtail its nuclear program.

The move means Obama's fellow Democrats will have enough votes to protect the nuclear deal between Iran and world powers in the U.S. Congress.

Their next goal is to see if they can gather at least 41 votes in the Senate to use the filibuster procedural rule to block a disapproval resolution in the Senate and keep Obama from having to use his veto power.

Mikulski / GETTY IMAGES

Quoted

"No deal is perfect, especially one negotiated with the Iranian regime. I have concluded that this Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action is the best option available to block Iran from having a nuclear bomb ... For these reasons, I will vote in favor of this deal."

Mikulski in a statement

Secretary of State John Kerry gave a speech about the deal in Philadelphia on Wednesday, arguing that its benefits outweigh any drawbacks.

U.S. lawmakers have until Sept. 17 to vote on a "resolution of disapproval," which would weaken the international pact by eliminating Obama's ability to temporarily waive many U.S. sanctions on Iran.

The Senate and House of Representatives are expected to take up the issue as soon as they return to Washington on Sept. 8 after their August recess.

With Republicans virtually united in opposition, Democrats have spent the summer rallying support for an agreement seen as a potential legacy foreign policy achievement for the president.

Another 57 email threads contain government info

Judge's orders. Nearly 8,000 emails have been released, they are being published in monthly batches.

Hillary Clinton / GETTY IMAGES

A review last month by Reuters of previously released Clinton emails found 30 email threads that the State Department has marked to show they include information shared in confidence by foreign government officials, from prime ministers to spy chiefs.

U.S. government regulations examined by Reuters say this sort of information, whether written or spoken, must be classified from the start, and handled through secure, government-controlled channels.

Reuters found 57 email threads in the latest batch of emails released on Monday that the State Department has marked as including the same type of information.

In all of the 87 email threads examined by Reuters, the State Department has blanked out the confidential information in the public copies, adding the classification code "1.4(B)," denoting foreign government information.

This is the only kind of information that presidential executive orders say is "presumed" to likely harm national security if wrongly disclosed. State Department regulations describe it as the "most important category of national security information" its officials encounter. REUTERS

Murdoch favorite. Rebekah Brooks returns to UK job in big comeback

Rebekah Brooks, the Rupert Murdoch protegee cleared last year of orchestrating a criminal campaign that damaged the British establishment, will return to her old job running the tycoon's British newspapers next week.

Brooks, who worked her way up from the lowest rung on the newsroom ladder to become one of the most influential people in Britain, will resume oversight of The Sun and The Times of London papers on Monday following a high-profile fall from grace four years ago.

With sales at the brash Sun tabloid in decline, Brooks is being brought back to breathe new life into the group.

She will be joined by Tony Gallagher as The Sun's editor-in-chief — a respected journalist and a key figure in the success of MailOnline, one of the world's most popular sites.

Murdoch and Brooks / GETTY IMAGES

"I am delighted to return to News UK," said Brooks, who was dubbed by some as Murdoch's "fifth daughter." "It is a privilege to be back amongst the most talented journalists and executives in the business."

Her return was condemned by critics who questioned Murdoch's judgment in bringing back one of Britain's most vilified journalists who was once depicted as a witch on the front page of a news magazine over her role in a phone-hacking scandal.

Baltimore judge: Charges against police in Freddie Gray case can go forward

Died in custody. Protests and a day of rioting, arson and looting drew worldwide attention.

Baltimore police officers push back a protester. / GETTY IMAGES

A judge on Wednesday rejected defense motions to drop charges against six Baltimore police officers charged in the death of a black man from an injury in custody, clearing the way for a scheduled trial next month.

Baltimore City Circuit Court Judge Barry Williams also rejected a defense motion calling for State's Attorney Marilyn Mosby and her office to recuse themselves from the Freddie Gray case.

Security at the courthouse was enhanced for the hearing, and protesters rallied outside, decrying what they called the militarization of the police. One person was arrested.

Williams rejected the defense contention that Mosby violated her obligation to assure a fair trial when she announced the charges at a news conference as the largely black city of 620,000 people was in turmoil.

Williams said that point would best be settled in a misconduct proceeding, not in his courtroom. He said Mosby's comments did not warrant dropping charges.

"The motion is hereby dismissed," he said before a courtroom nearly filled with reporters and spectators.

Defense arguments that Mosby's comments would prejudice jurors could be raised when a jury is selected, Williams said. Trial is set for Oct. 13.

Lawyers for the officers had contended that Mosby had publicized evidence when she announced the charges.

Williams also turned back the defense request for recusal that contended Mosby's office had investigated the case and thus created a conflict of interest.

Five things to know

1 FAA names two officials to lead on drone policy

The Federal Aviation Administration on Wednesday named two new officials to lead its effort to incorporate commercial unmanned aerial systems, or drones, into the U.S. airspace.

Hoot Gibson, an aviation expert who has been involved in development of a next-generation air transportation system for the United States, was named as the agency's UAS integration senior adviser — a new position responsible for external outreach, education and interagency initiatives.

A former U.S. Air Force career officer and executive director of the FAA-sponsored NextGen Institute, Gibson will report directly to FAA Deputy Administrator Michael Whitaker.

The agency also named FAA official Earl Lawrence as director of its UAS Integration Office, an existing position responsible for crafting new commercial drone regulations that are expected early next year. Lawrence, who joined FAA in 2010, previously led the agency's Kansas City-based Small Airplane Directorate, which is charged with regulating small aircraft, airships and balloons. REUTERS

The U.S. Army said on Wednesday it would open its elite Ranger School to all soldiers regardless of gender, after two women made history last month by becoming the first to pass the grueling leadership course.

"We must ensure that this training opportunity is available to all soldiers who are qualified and capable and we continue to look for ways to select, train, and retain the best soldiers to meet our nation's needs," Army Secretary John McHugh said in a statement. REUTERS

4 Texas teen fatally shoots himself while taking selfie

A 19-year-old Texas man who was posing with a gun for a social media selfie photo accidentally shot himself and died from the wounds, Houston police said on Wednesday.

"A witness told police he was taking a selfie with a gun and the gun accidentally discharged," Houston police spokeswoman Jodi Silva said.

The identity of the man killed in the incident in Houston has been withheld pending an investigation by the coroner. REUTERS

5 Six charged in Oklahoma on suspicion of running deadly drug ring

Six people have been charged in Oklahoma with homicide, accused of running an illegal prescription drug ring that authorities linked to the overdose death of a woman last year.

The arrests of three men and two women took place outside of Tulsa and stemmed from the death of Jennifer McNulty, 38, who died after taking oxycodone she purchased from a network of prescription drug dealers. Her son was one of those arrested.

Prescription drug abuse led to nearly 3,200 poisoning deaths in Oklahoma in 2007-2011. REUTERS

Fall Movie Preview

Summer is over, and it's time to get down to brass tacks — that is, to movies of quality. But autumn is a time of great fruitfulness, and the movies coming out are a diverse lot: not just awards-gobblers but blockbusters, family films, dumb thrillers and Halloween crowd-pleasers. If you're stoked for a big title, may we recommend something smaller with which it might share an obvious — or possibly tiny and probably inconsequential — quality? Here's our guide to the plethora of riches for the next few months. Matt Prigge & Ned Ehrbar

'The Walk'
SONY PICTURES

'Our Brand Is Crisis'
WARNER BROS. ENTERTAINMENT INC.

'The Walk' (Sept. 30) / 'Our Brand Is Crisis' (Oct. 30)

Common connection: Stories already good as documentaries

Does the story of "The Walk" sound familiar? Very, very familiar? If so, perhaps that's because the tale of Philippe Petit, a French acrobat who strutted across a tightrope strung between the World Trade Center buildings, was told in the documentary "Man on Wire," which made millions, won the best documentary Oscar, etc. Now here it is as an unnecessary Robert Zemeckis movie with Joseph Gordon-Levitt. The relatively obscure 2005 doc "Our Brand Is Crisis," which looks at the Americanization of South American politics, makes more sense being turned into a star-studded film, this one by David Gordon Green and starring no less than Sandra Bullock.

'The Transporter Refueled' (Sept. 4) / 'Taxi' (Oct. 2)

Common connection: Cars

Yes, the left field, Jason Statham-less "Transporter" spinoff, starring one Ed Skrein, features automotive mayhem and gunplay and then still more automotive mayhem. But the Iranian drama "Taxi" might, in a way, be more thrilling. It's the third film Jafar Panahi has made in secret after being banned from filmmaking by the government and, like "This Is Not a Film" and "Closed Curtain" before it, it was secreted out of the country. Now that's exciting (and tragic).

'Black Mass' (Sept. 18) / 'The Danish Girl' (Nov. 27)

Common connection: Onscreen transformations for famous actors

Johnny Depp has made such a career of freakish transformations that it's not really surprising anymore — except when he transforms into Whitey Bulger, the balding, understated, middle-aged gangster at the center of "Black Mass." It's a far more unsettling metamorphosis than Oscar-winner Eddie Redmayne's in "The Danish Girl" as Lili Elbe, one of the first trans women to undergo sexual reassignment surgery.

'The Intern' (Sept. 25) / 'Carol' (Nov. 20)

Common connection:

'Stonewall' (Sept. 25) / 'Jem and the Holograms' (Oct. 23)

Common connection: Fan-polarizing trailers

You know what's awkward? Alienating your core audience with the first trailer for your film. That's the obstacle both "Stonewall" (about the 1969 riots that sparked the gay pride movement) and "Jem and the Holograms" (a modern take on the '80s girl rock band cartoon) are looking to overcome, since their first glimpses angered the folks most likely to show up.

'Jem and the Holograms' UNIVERSAL PICTURES

'Stonewall' ROADSIDE ATTRACTIONS

May-December relationships

In Nancy Meyers' "The Intern," Anne Hathaway plays a flummoxed young Internet fashion god who finds herself taking old-school (but, happily, not tooooo old-school) advice from a retiree intern, who's played by Robert De Niro. They don't fall in love, though perhaps they should have. After all, that happens in Todd Haynes' period romance, which charts the relations between a young department store clerk (Rooney Mara) and an older housewife (Cate Blanchett) in the 1950s. Now that, then, is progressive!

'The Martian' (Oct. 2) / 'Queen of the Desert' (Fall)

Common connection: Inhospitable locations

Where would you rather be stranded? On the angry Red Planet with Matt Damon and director Ridley Scott? Or on our planet's own dry spots with Nicole Kidman and director Werner Herzog? "The Martian" has a terminally worried supporting cast, including Kristen Wiig, Chiwetel Ejiofor and Jessica Chastain (doing space drama from Earth once again). But "Desert" has James Franco, Damian Lewis and Robert Pattinson, who now seems to exclusively work with weirdo auteurs.

'Bridge of Spies' (Oct. 16) / 'Sleeping With Other People' (Sept. 11)

Common connection: Fraught relationships we know will work out in the end

In Steven Spielberg's "Bridge of Spies," an American lawyer (Tom Hanks) battles with a KGB agent (Mark Rylance) over the release of a pilot captured in Cold War-era Soviet Russia. But we know the two will eventually make a connection, just as we know the besties in the rom-com "Sleeping With Other People," played by Alison Brie and Jason Sudeikis, will ultimately stop all that jibber-jabbering and hook the hell up.

'Crimson Peak' (Oct. 16) / 'Rock the Kasbah' (Oct. 23)

Common connection: Charismatic men preying on younger women

It can be pretty fraught out there for a young lady, especially when, like in "Crimson Peak," you're an English author (Mia Wasikowska) whose dashing new husband (Tom Hiddleston) lives in what turns out to be a house of horrors. Just as dangerous? Being a young Afghan singer who earns the attention of a washed-up and stranded rock manager (Bill Murray) who wants to get you on Afghanistan's version of "American Idol."

'Burnt' (Oct. 23) / 'The Green Inferno' (Sept. 25)

Common connection: Food

Hungry? You could watch Bradley Cooper once again try to get his Anthony Bourdain on in "Burnt," which exists in part because no one watched him play actual Bourdain in the "Kitchen Confidential" show a decade ago. Or you could take in the sights of a bunch of environmentalist do-gooders becoming cannibal chow in Eli Roth's "The Green Inferno." Let your stomach guide the way.

'Scouts Guide to the Zombie Apocalypse' (Oct. 30) / '99 Homes' (Sept. 25)

Common connection: Fighting

Sometimes the only answer to adversity is getting your hands dirty — and maybe a little bloody. But "adversity" can take many forms, like the comically violent zombie apocalypse in "Scouts Guide to the Zombie Apocalypse" or the more frighteningly realistic Florida in the post-housing crash in 2010, in which downtrodden single dad Andrew Garfield gets into the wrong side of the eviction game with Michael Shannon.

'Spectre' (Nov. 6) / 'The Lobster' (Fall)

Common connections: Lea Seydoux and Ben Whishaw, secret societies

"Spectre" features Daniel Craig's brooding Bond finally getting in deep with super-duper clandestine criminal organization SPECTRE (and maybe nifty honcho Ernst Blofeld). But that's not as chilling as the world of another film also touting Bond Girl Lea Seydoux and current Q Ben Whishaw (plus Colin Farrell, Rachel Weisz and John C. Reilly). "The Lobster" depicts a dystopia where the terminally single are forced to mate. If they fail, they're turned into random creatures — a fate more terrifying than that old groin

'Legend' (Oct. 2) / 'By the Sea' (Nov. 13)

Common connection: Couples acting together

If you like your drama with an extra meta layer of knowing that the folks onscreen are actually a couple in real life, then watching Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie play a couple whose marriage is crumbling during a luxe vacation in "By the Sea" is for you. Meanwhile, in "Legend," Tom Hardy does some of his best work opposite ... Tom Hardy, as real-life identical twin gangsters Ronald and Reginald Kray — because who doesn't want twice as much Tom Hardy?

'Entertainment'

'Steve Jobs' (Oct. 9) / 'Entertainment' (Nov. 13)

Common connection: Brilliant loners

Aaron Sorkin's latest study of a cold genius bastard is "Steve Jobs" (not to be confused with the doc "Steve Jobs: The Man in the Machine," out this week), which spends nearly three hours looking in detail at three of his biggest moments. Jobs remains controversial even in death, while Gregg Turkington — or at least his alter ego: anti-standup comic Neil Hamburger — is an all-too-divisive figure still walking amongst us. In "Entertainment," the notorious creation gets his own film, and one by filmmaker Rick Alverson of "The Comedy," which has Tim Heidecker also tormenting nice, unsuspecting characters.

'Creed'
WARNER BROTHERS

'Creed' (Nov. 25) / 'Experimenter' (Oct. 16)

Common connection: Testing resilience

In one corner there's the son of the late Apollo Creed — actually named Adonis, and played by Michael B. Jordan — who has to learn to trust his father's former nemesis-turned-friend Rocky Balboa (Sylvester Stallone) as he trains for a fight. In the other, there's social psychologist Stanley Milgram (Peter Sarsgaard), who, in 1961, wonders if his radical behavior experiments can prove that regular people will always obey authority. May the best look at human resilience win!

Holiday Movie Season meltdown

We'd be remiss in not name-dropping the many December releases. Mid-month sees both "Sisters" — not a remake of the Brian De Palma classic but a comedy with Tina Fey and Amy Poehler — and something called "Star Wars: The Force Awakens," the new film with "Inside Llewyn Davis" actors Oscar Isaac and Adam Driver. Christmas Day boasts the Will Smith football expose "Concussion"; David O. Russell's "Joy," which of course features JLaw and BCoop; Oliver Stone's sure-to-be nutso "Snowden"; Alejandro Gonzalez Inarritu's "The Revenant"; and Quentin Tarantino's "The Hateful Eight," which will bow in theaters equipped for 70mm only before expanding to other, less fancy theaters. All that and Michael Fassbender as The Scottish Play in "Macbeth" too.

'Peanuts' (Nov. 6) / 'Youth' (Dec. 4)

Common connection: A state of arrested adolescence

Rather than ruin the aura of a childhood fave a la the "Smurfs" and "Alvin and the Chipmunk"'s movies, the makers of the "Peanuts" film appear to have stayed true to Charles Schulz's comic-strip source, spackling it in CGI but keeping the intimacy and, best of all, actual children voicing our leads. They're free to gallivant about like kids — just, as it laser from "Goldfinger."

'The Hunger Games: Mockingjay — Part 2' (Nov. 20) / 'Brooklyn' (Nov. 6)

Common connection: Girl against the world

If you're in the market for a strong but vulnerable female protagonist, you're were, like Michael Caine and Harvey Keitel in "Youth," Paolo Sorrentino's art film-horndog follow-up to his Oscar winner, "The Great Beauty," where the two hit the Alps to carouse (and think about getting old).

probably already lining up for the final installment of Katniss Everdeen (Jennifer Lawrence) fighting for freedom from tyranny. You might also enjoy Saoirse Ronan's Irish immigrant torn between old home and new in "Brooklyn." Oh, and each has a love triangle.

‘A Walk in the Woods’ is not another wacky old person movie

‘A Walk in the Woods’

Director: Ken Kwapis
Stars: Robert Redford, Nick Nolte

“A Walk in the Woods” should be “one of those” — those safe, cuddly, offensively inoffensive old-person movies, like “Last Vegas” and “The Bucket List.” These films repurpose legends, and in the case of “Woods” it’s Robert Redford and Nick Nolte, shown attempting to conquer the 2,000-some miles of the Appalachian Trail. It boasts barn-door-broad jokes and all the visual flair of a modern sitcom. But if it’s not profound it is wise, and in subtle, casual ways, and it avoids a lot of the heinous tropes of the genre. There are no Viagra jokes but, more important, there are also few easy reassurances and an attempt to find a balance between yuks and a focus on regret, mortality and the fact that the body utterly fails us.

Even the premise is steeped in existential dread. Redford plays real-life author Bill Bryson, who, flummoxed by a string of funerals, decides to prove his vitality. The only one crazy enough to join him is Stephen (Nick Nolte), the most reprobate of his old friends, who shows up as, well, Nick Nolte: a hot mess in frayed clothes, prone to walking into doors and gulping down pancakes like a hyperactive infant.

What follows is a deceptively nice, old-person twist on Kelly Reichardt’s “Old Joy,” about two 30-something friends failing to reconnect on another, more manageable trip. This one ends in a happier place, of course, and there is a preponderance of wacky, crowd-pleasing episodes. But it’s smarter and more melancholic and deeper than it often lets on. We’re encouraged to think about deep stuff, and the idea of failure and embracing limitations underscores every lighthearted misadventure. The epiphanies tend to be small, not major and definitely not triumphant. The abrupt way it ends may be the best thing about it — a sign that it’s both gentler and more tough than the wacky olds-in-the-woods movie it ostensibly is.

Before the Aaron Sorkin-written “Steve Jobs” arrives in October, you’re stuck with the doc, “The Man in the Machine.” MAGNOLIA PICTURES

‘Steve Jobs: The Man in the Machine’
Director: Alex Gibney
Genre: Documentary
Rating: R

Ragging on the assembly line documentaries of Alex Gibney gets old, especially since he makes so many of them. “Steve Jobs: The Man in the Machine” is the third Gibney film from 2015, and one of them was a four-hour look at Frank Sinatra. They’re not terrible, and sometimes they’re even good; this year’s Scientology jab “Going Clear” could stand more insight, but it gets the job done. “Steve Jobs,” however, is everything that’s wrong with the Gibney approach: a combination of pure exposition and shallow insights, this one with a takedown that’s borderline passive-aggressive. It doesn’t want to be a hit piece but it’s missing those aspects — including Jobs himself, though Gibney finds plenty of old clips in which he hangs himself — that might actually make it useful.

But what do you expect from the Robert Pollard of documentaries? Not to slag on Pollard; two-minute songs are easier to toss off than two-hour docs on earth-quaking subjects. Gibney films have also tackled Enron, Jack Abramoff, Eliot Spitzer, the Catholic Church sex scandals, Wikileaks and Lance Armstrong, plus difficult-to-simplify artists James Brown and Fela Kuti. Gibney just cranks them out, and it shows, in their 101-level profiles and his use of painfully obvious songs to underscore key life moments. “The Man in the Machine” goes easier on this angle than most. He mostly plays live Bob Dylan, one of Jobs’ favorites (whose lyrics he often rewrote to fit his own life), saving the only truly groaning moment for the part where Jobs gives Apple computers colored designs, which strong-arms Gibney into playing the Stones’ “She’s a Rainbow.” Gibney always wants to make the definitive take on a major topic, but at this point, after over a dozen films, the only worthwhile Gibney film would be one on the questionable filmmaking habits of Alex Gibney. It seems that when two actors are sharing a movie together, they have to find some kind of method for working. How did you and Clarkson work things out?

Patricia and I found that we could best serve Isabel and the script by staying in our own bubbles. I stayed in Darwan Singh's bubble; she stayed in Wendy's bubble. There was hardly any conversation between takes, hardly any conversation socially. I think I might have had dinner with Patricia, with the director, once. It was a tremendous exercise in not blurring the edges. They come from different worlds and they have different rhythms. To make that work, the rhythms have to be separate. It sounds paradoxical, but it's true, and it really pays off. The latter scenes pay off because we did remain in our bubbles then were so close to each other in that tiny car. It was very intimate and we used that to our best advantage.

Sir Ben Kingsley on becoming Sikh

The legendary actor learned to absorb another culture for the dramedy "Learning to Drive."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Sir Ben Kingsley plays a Sikh cab driver in New York who befriends a literary critic (Patricia Clarkson) in "Learning to Drive," in theaters now. BROAD GREEN PICTURES

Some commentators have wondered why Sir Ben Kingsley was cast as a Sikh professor-turned-American cabbie in "Learning to Drive," apparently unaware of his deep Indian heritage. His father, though born in Kenya, was of Gujarati Indian descent, though that doesn't mean he knew too much about the culture he was entering. Though Kingsley's Darwan spends much of the film teaching Wendy (Patricia Clarkson), a New Yorker mid-divorce, to drive, he also spends much of it in Queens amongst an enclave of Sikhs. It was a world the Oscar winner was eager to absorb.

How much experience did you have with the Sikh culture before getting the role?

Hardly at all. But to inhabit a Sikh as an actor is a profoundly fascinating and rewarding way of examining their culture, because you put their skin on as well as their turbans. You absorb their attitudes. I spent a lot of time with [Sikh advisor] Harpreet Singh Toor, who helped me with my turban every morning. I very gently, ever so gently, chatted away with him — nothing invasive, nothing assertive, and just by osmosis took in his attitude to life. Of course, he's exiled from India. They're all exiled. And that's tough. But they've managed to make a wonderful life here.

The film has a deep respect for the community, and it avoids condescension as well.

We had a lot of support from the Sikh community in Queens. There is a wonderful temple there that they let us shoot in. I thought that was a wonderful gesture on the part of the Sikh community, as, tragically, the temple was invaded and people did die, in quite recent history, after being mistaken for terrorists. [The temple] serves as an island of calm and order and respect and love and devotion in the sea of the big city. Isabel [Coixet, the director] wants to show a side of New York that is kind and gentle and also very abrasive and frightening.

What were your experiences like walking among them, especially in costume?

Often I was walking with the Sikh advisor or with my assistants in the Sikh community in Richmond Hill. I had to apologize to people because I didn't speak Punjabi. [Laughs] It was very empowering and affirming to have wonderful people come up and start chatting with me. It really made me feel that I got something right, that there was something pretty solid behind my disguise.

Better burgers on a grill or stove

A good burger takes patience, a light touch and good timing. ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

Let a fourth-generation beef man tell you how burgers should be done.

EVA KIS
eva.kis@metro.us

Summer is burger season, and not having a grill is no reason to keep letting Shake Shack do all the work.

To get you ready for Labor Day, we talked to Jamie Schweid, executive vice president at Schweid & Sons, a fourth-generation New York City ground beef empire that claims to sell nothing less than "the very best burger."

Like any good businessman, he makes sure his product lives up to its reputation. That means Schweid, 36, still spends plenty of time standing over a fire, and he gave us some tips on how to make the most of your meat, wherever you're cooking it.

The right beef

Opinions on the right cut of beef for a burger vary, which is why Schweid & Sons produces three different kinds: chuck brisket, USDA prime chuck and a butcher's blend of chuck round and sirloin. Finding what works for you is the kind of science experiment you'll be happy to repeat.

• DON'T skimp on fat. The minimum proportion you want is 20 percent, but 25 percent is even better. Remember, that's where the flavor (and moisture) is.

• DO go for grass-fed beef if you're looking for something a little different. Schweid says the meat is gamier: "If you took both burgers, side-by-side with nothing on them, you'd definitely be able to taste the difference."

Burgers vs. meatloaf

As far as seasoning, Schweid calls himself a purist and doesn't hold with mixing pork or breadcrumbs into the patties. "It has to do also with the meat that's used; if you're using great quality ground beef, you really want to let the meat do all the talking," he says. "You don't want to add too much to that ground beef because then you're no longer in the realm of burgers — you're making meatloaf."

• DON'T overwork the meat, which is the other downside of mixing a lot of things into the burger; it'll lose juice and change texture. This goes for when it's on the heat, too — never flatten it with the spatula!

• DO get some kosher salt on both sides of the burger before throwing it onto the skillet or grill. This will help get that nice, crispy crust you're looking for.

Don't screw this up

Yes, everything else we've mentioned is important, but the make-or-break part of a good burger is the cooking temperature. "You can have a great bun, perfectly melted cheese, delicious barbecue sauce, avocado, etc., but if the burger is not cooked properly, it presents a bit of a nightmare," says Schweid. Too hot, and the burger will be dry; not hot enough, and it'll stick and not cook properly.

For a grill, set it to 350-375 degrees. On a stovetop, use a cast-iron skillet — it holds heat better for a more even sear. Set it over a medium-high flame and let it warm through before getting to work.

• DON'T try to save time by cooking steaks with burgers. Steaks are thicker and need a higher heat, especially if you want a nice sear.

• DO try your hand at wood if you're a professional "because what happens with wood is you get inconsistent cooking throughout the grill if you don't properly lay the wood out." Schweid prefers charcoal for its consistency when the coals are laid out properly.

When is it done?

• DON'T be a savage and waste good burgers by cutting them open. Schweid uses what he calls the Face Method to test how done his burgers are, based on texture. If the patty is soft like your cheeks, that's medium rare; your chin is about medium, and if it has no give like your forehead, it's well done. Don't be that guy though — burgers want to be medium-rare for the most flavor.

• DO stop cooking the burger before it's done. "When you're taking the burger off the grill, it shouldn't be the perfect temperature internally because, after you take beef off the grill, whether it's steak or hamburger, it cooks internally for about two minutes. The process should be: Throw the burger on the grill, flip it once and then, when it's done, put it on a bun."

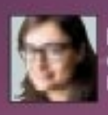
How to celebrate Labor Day

going out

WHERE TO EAT, DRINK & PLAY

Not sure what to do with your long weekend? We've got a few ideas.



LISA WEIDENFELD
@LisaWeidenfeld
lisa.weidenfeld@metro.us

Labor Day might mean summer is really ending, but there's no reason not to celebrate the holiday in style. And hey, you've survived the annual horror show of moving that is Sept. 1 in the Boston area, so you've made it through the worst part of the month. But what if you don't have a barbecue to attend? There's still plenty to do around the city.

Boston Harbor Fireworks

You can't go wrong with fireworks over the harbor on a cool summer evening. The city is setting off fireworks from barges along the waterfront, from both the North End and the Seaport. While the show starts at 9 p.m. on Saturday, you'll want to get there a bit early to make sure you get a good viewing spot. Try Christopher Columbus Park or the Long Wharf in the North End, the South Boston Waterfront or Piers Park in East Boston for better vantage points.

Pier 6 Barbecue

Head to Charlestown for a barbecue you don't have to cook yourself. Pier 6 is serving it up starting at 2 p.m. on Saturday, and you can watch the fireworks from the patio later. Admission is $30, which gets you the barbecue of your choice (ribs, chicken or steak kabobs, or a hamburger), plus a wedge of watermelon, corn on the cob and a 16 oz. glass of Harpoon Ale. You don't need a ticket to get in, but they recommend getting one early to guarantee entrance. One 8th St., Charlestown

Shake Shack holiday specials

Given how hard it is to get a seat in Shake Shack at the best of times, we're guessing they're going to be completely swamped this weekend. You can now get a special holiday Shack corn dog for only $4.50, or a peach pie concrete for $4.25 (or $6.75 if you're on a very romantic date and want to share). The concrete is vanilla custard mixed with a slice of peach pie, while the corn dog comes with a sweet corn relish. They'll be available all weekend.

Dance the night away with Joe Jonas

You've always wanted to celebrate Labor Day with a Jonas brother, right? The moment has finally arrived: Foxwoods has Joe Jonas lined up to DJ this Sunday, at what the casino bills as "the Northeast's only Vegas-style pool party." That may be because it's generally too cold to have pool parties here but, hey, it's still hot out! Celebrate the remaining warm weather, put your dancing shoes on and go see Joe spin the hits. Doors open at noon, and tickets are $50.

Campfire Festival at Club Passim

Club Passim's annual Labor Day weekend music festival is packed to the gills with a diverse array of musicians. True to the "campfire" spirit, there's a casual air to the weekend. In Passim's words, it's "as much about the community as it is about the music," with artists often joining each other for sets, and a porous barrier between audience and performer. Tickets are $10-$25. Head to Passim.org for more info. 47 Palmer St., Cambridge

Lou Barlow is ready for you to hear his new album ... almost

The Dinosaur Jr. and Sebadoh member is releasing his first solo album in six years and embarking on a cross-county tour.

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
emily.laurence@metro.us

Lou Barlow's new album "Brace the Wave" comes out tomorrow. RACHEL ENNEKING

"Brace the Wave," Lou Barlow's first solo album since 2009, is out this week, but he still hasn't played it for anyone besides his label, at least as of the time of this interview, 10 days before the September 4 release date. "I can't sit in the same room and play my music to anybody," he says, despite the fact that he's about to go on a cross-country tour promoting it.

Back and forth

Barlow hasn't been being lazy the past six years. He's been keeping busy with his bands Dinosaur Jr. and Sebadoh, both of which will start working on new albums soon, he says. And while he loves to play in a band, Barlow says he was itching to play solo again and thinks the very act of going back and forth between the two makes him better at both.

Making it look easy

It only took him six days in the studio to complete the album. "It's easy," Barlow says of crafting songs. "It's so easy for me that it's hard for me to imagine that everybody can't do it. I've actually struggled a lot over the years recognizing that it's something that's a talent." Barlow says melodies and harmonies come to him naturally, or a lyric and a melody come to him that he builds upon.

Lyrics are a little trickier. "I probably spend too much time on them," Barlow says. "It's important to me that the lyrics mean something to me because it makes them easier to remember rather than just pulling nonsense out of the air or trying to rhyme something." That's one of the reasons why he doesn't like to play his songs for people he knows.

A time of transition

For the past 17 years, Barlow has been living in California, but he recently moved back to his Massachusetts hometown with his kids and ex-wife, in close proximity to his parents, sister and fellow Dinosaur Jr. members. "I just thought it was necessary to center myself and the kids and get as much support as possible so we can hive out this next period of our lives and have our kids grow up," he says.

It would be easy to assume that his new song "Moving" is about this very process, but Barlow explains that the song is less literal than that. "I'm talking about packing up things in my mind," he says. "Thinking things like, 'OK well, this isn't going to work out. I guess I have to move on.'" Sounds like he's about ready for that next phase.

But while her vibe's definitely moody, it's also sexy and soulful. Annabel may have grievances, but she's not wallowing — she's letting her demons out to play.

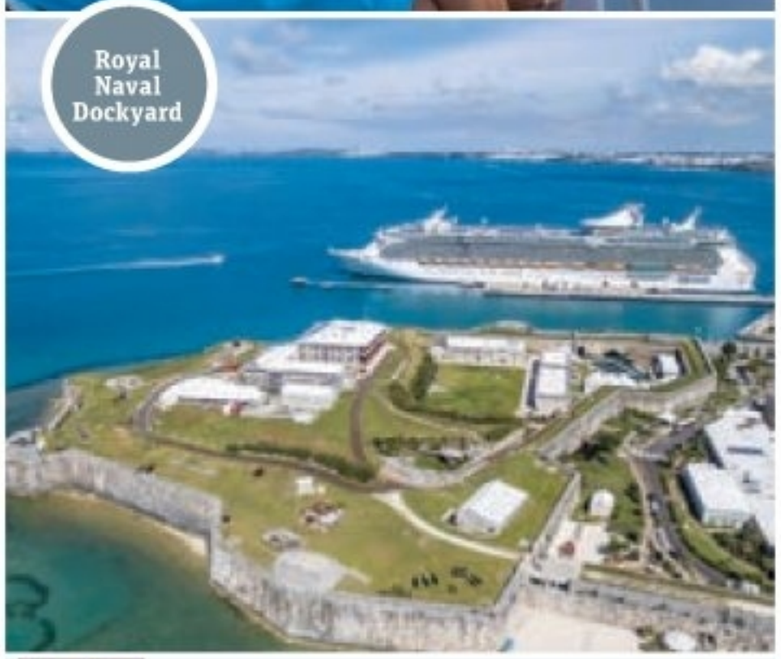
Bermuda: In the pink

ALL PHOTOS ROYAL CARIBBEAN INTERNATIONAL



For a place that's just 22 miles long and two miles wide, Bermuda has an incredibly diverse range of attractions.

The name Bermuda conjures up images of pink sand and shorts, but there is a lot more to this tiny island nation than lazing on the beach or a rather questionable sartorial style — so much more that several cruise lines, including Norwegian (www.ncl.com) and Royal Caribbean International (www.royalcaribbean.com), have one-week voyages that only visit the island. Ships sail from the U.S. — usually New York or Boston — stay three nights then head back, giving those on board time to get to know the island.

That's certainly worth doing because Bermuda is delightful. A British Overseas Territory in the Atlantic, some 650 miles off North Carolina, it is a little piece of England in the sun but with a large helping of African culture mixed in. Don't be surprised to find they drive on the left and fly the Union Jack, but the local restaurants serve fish chowder and pawpaw casserole. It's also pretty, clean, friendly and easy to explore by bus or ferry.

Beyond the pink sand beaches, the tiny island draws tourists for outdoor adventures.

The pink sands and clear waters are top of the list for many, but thrill-seekers will find plenty to get the adrenaline pumping, with everything from sailing and caving to cliff jumping and flyboarding, where powerful water jets fire you up into the air. You can dive down to the sunken wrecks and colorful reefs that surround the island without a PADI qualification on a resort course. If that sounds too adventurous, there's scuba diving. It's a cross between snorkeling and scuba, but you can dive to 20 feet as your regulator is attached to air tanks that float on a raft on the surface.

Away from the water, there's hiking and biking — the 18-mile route along the old railway line is recommended, as the roads are busy. Head to the Royal Naval Dockyard to learn about the island's maritime history in the National Museum, shop for local arts and crafts, and try your hand riding a Segway — an upright scooter that's powered by your balance. For a bird's-eye view of the island, there are aerial rides in a single-engine Cessna 172.

Top tips

- There are no hire cars in Bermuda, but the local buses (pink to match the sand!) and ferries are safe and easy to use. Travel passes costs $19 for one day and $31.50 for two.
- Take a break from your ship's cuisine to dine with a Bermudian family in their own home. You'll learn to prepare local dishes such as grilled red snapper and BBQ chicken before sitting down to taste your handiwork.
- Cruise ships visit in summer between May and October when the weather is hot and humid. Expect temperatures to average 75–85°F with short, sharp showers.

Seneca Falls: Women's rights and 'A Wonderful Life'

ALL PHOTOS SENECA COUNTY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

PUBLIC DOMAIN

The town in New York's Finger Lakes saw the beginnings of the Women's Rights Movement and inspired the classic Frank Capra film.

The small New York town of Seneca Falls played a surprisingly big role in the women's equality movement. Supporters gathered there in 1848 for the first Women's Rights Convention. It was also the home of leading activist Elizabeth Cady Stanton, and the town's Wesleyan Chapel hosted anti-slavery and political rallies.

At the Women's Rights National Historical Park (www.nps.gov/wori/index.htm), films, displays and documents tell the story of women's struggle for quality, then and now, and how it has expanded to include fighting for civil rights for all on a global stage. Through December, the exhibit "Remember to be a Lady; Forget you are a Woman" looks at the experiences of the WAVES — women in the U.S. Navy — during World War II.

The National Women's Hall of Fame (www.womenofthehall.org) is humbly housed in an 1844 knitting mill and showcases over 300 women in the humanities, sciences, sports, engineering, politics, education, medicine and other areas, most of whom are little known outside (and often inside) their field. It's an appropriate example of adaptive re-use, since most of the people who worked there were women. The 2015 ceremony for the induction of new members is Oct. 3.

The classic holiday film "It's a Wonderful Life" is set in the fictional town of Bedford Falls. Writer/director Frank Capra visited Seneca Falls often while writing the screenplay, and many of the movie's locations and plot elements seem drawn from those visits.

The Wonderful Life Museum (www.wonderfullifemuseum.com) has photos, props and memorabilia from the film. You can pick up (or download) an illustrated walking tour to sites that inspired the story and setting.

Patriots just one week away from the real deal

NFL. Pats still have plenty to figure out before next week's enormous opener.

One week from tonight, the Patriots will be on center stage as they face the Pittsburgh Steelers in the NFL's annual season kickoff game (8:30 p.m., NBC). The national spotlight, however, is not exactly outside the norm as the Pats have been the talk of the football world since January. As of early Wednesday night, Deflategate is not over. Judge Richard Berman has not yet ruled on the fate of Tom Brady as it pertains to his four-game suspension for being "generally aware" that the Pats were using illegally deflated balls in the 2014 AFC Championship Game. The ruling could very well come down today, however, the same day the Pats face the Giants (7:30 p.m., WBZ) in their final tune-up contest. A ruling today would be fitting, considering that it would put some finalization to one of the more bizarre offseasons in not only league but sports history.

"I spoke on behalf of the team and addressed the organization's position regarding, in my opinion, the most overblown story in recent NFL history," Patriots owner Robert Kraft said at the Charitable Foundation gala, in front of Brady and a group of Patriots players. "I advised our coach, his staff and all of our players to ignore the noise and keep their focus on what was most important for this upcoming season."

Following the Patriots' final preseason game Thursday night, the team will make a decision on which players will make the 53-man roster. The roster deadline is Saturday at 4 p.m. The Patriots' schedule in the early going of the 2015 season is irregular. Not only do they open up on a Thursday night, they also have their bye week earlier than any other team in the NFL, save for the Tennessee Titans (both Week 4 — the weekend of Oct. 4).

Tom Brady still hadn't heard a ruling from Judge Richard Berman as of early Wednesday night.

Is Peyton Manning overrated at quarterback this year in fantasy rankings? / GETTY IMAGES

ARE MCCOY, MORRIS AND MANNING TOO EXPENSIVE?

Average draft position, also known as ADP in the language of fantasy geek, is the vein that pumps blood through our selections. Without a clear understanding of where players are going to go — and if they're worth that price — we are wandering through the wilderness without a flashlight.

Travis Kelce is a perfect example. It's very easy to see he is a Gronkonian beast on his way to a breakout year. Because that's so clear, you'll likely need to use a fourth- or early fifth-round pick to secure him. I think Kelce is worth that price, but his ADP leaves a lot of room for debate. He's clearly not a sleeper.

Heading into Draft Week, realize that what our opponents think of players matters just as much as what we think of them.

Here are some very good players who are simply too expensive:

Slim Shady

LeSean McCoy is a naturally gifted runner on track for roughly 300 carries. Normally, that's a formula for a strong second-round fantasy pick. But McCoy is draped in red flags that make him a risk.

First and foremost, he was awful throughout the 2014 season, getting badly outplayed by Darren Sproles and losing late-season goal-line work to Chris Polk. That was in spite of playing in a RB-friendly Chip Kelly scheme and running behind an elite offensive line.

Now McCoy will have to deal with one of the league's worst o-lines and plays for a team that projects to be among the league's worst in red-zone opportunities.

Rob Gronkowski, Randall Cobb and A.J. Green are all better picks at similar ADPs.

Planet Alf

Are we sure Alfred Morris is actually good? He was elite while playing for Mike Shanahan, whose legendary zone-blocking scheme also made guys like Mike Anderson, Olandis Gary and Tatum Bell fantasy studs. That also coincided with the presence of Robert Griffin III, a running threat who occupied defenses on every play. This year, Alf will be pushed by impressive rookie Matt Jones and is on a team littered with even more dysfunction than ever before. I wouldn't take Morris in the fifth round, let alone the third where he currently goes. Give me Brandin Cooks, Jordan Matthews, Alshon Jeffery, Mike Evans, DeAndre Hopkins or Mark Ingram instead.

Wrong Manning

Would you rather have Peyton Manning in the fourth round or Eli Manning in the ninth? Before you answer, go back and watch Peyton over the final two months of last season in addition to this preseason. Then think about a new Gary Kubiak scheme that is going to emphasize extreme balance and turn Peyton into more of a game manager who won't be throwing in the fourth quarter of blowouts.

Meanwhile, Eli projects to sling it in shootouts thanks to a brutal defense and loaded offensive weaponry. Peyton's ADP is so high only because of his name.

FANTASY SPORTS

NFL news

JIMMY GRAHAM WILL BE MORE OF A BLOCKER IN SEATTLE THAN HE WAS IN NEW ORLEANS.

Jimmy Graham was used as a run-blocker on 36.5 percent of his preseason snaps with the Seahawks, up from 27.1 percent with the Saints last regular season. It's a reminder that although Graham will still be primarily a pass-catcher, his opportunities in run-based Seattle are going to be far fewer than they were in New Orleans' high-flying spread scheme. Travis Kelce, Greg Olsen and Martellus Bennett all provide more value at the tight end position given their respective ADPs.

ADP undervalued

Keep an eye on these players, as they could be midround steals.

- Sam Bradford, Eagles — Been an obvious late-round steal all summer as he enters the land of Chip.
- Greg Olsen, Panthers — Going to be an absolute target monster now that Kelvin Benjamin is done.
- David Johnson, Cardinals — Andre Ellington has been falling out of favor as a feature back, opening door for the hyperathletic Johnson.
